A Romance of Divorce.

It is not generally known, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, yet it is probably true, that the novel of East Lynne. although written in England, had the groundwork of its story in a singular marriage which took place in this city, the notice and the attending circumstances at the time being copied by was about as follows: house, fell in love with a young lady whose father was a well to do Second street merchant, and after proper season of attention the couple were married. Both soon found out that they were not happily mated, and after a marriage of seven years, during which time they had three child ren, two boys and a girl, they mutually acreed to the husband applying for a bill of diverge, on the ground of in-compatibility of temper (The divorce was granted, and the wife went home to her father, who had, through indorsing, lost his business and all his property. The daughter's and his own misfortunes weighed so heavily upon the father's mind that during a momert of mental alienation he took his own life, leaving his daughter penniless and to rough it with the cold charity of the world as best she could. The woman, a brave little creature, tried every way she knew how to gain an honest living-in fact, workingso hard giving music lessons and doing embroidery for her old schoolmates that her health gave way, and, having no money to pay her board, must beg, starve or go to the poor-house. To tuin to the other side of the picture, the husband, after a few months' remarried, and at the time of which we speak had not only the three children by the first wife, but also in addition thereto a litt e two-year-old girl by the second wife. The latter lady being ill, the husband advertised for a nurse and housekeeper, which notice reached the eve of the first wife, and she, in her trouble, went to the former partner of her heart, told him of her sad condition, and applied for the position in his household, The husband knew not what to say; but, after Mowever obscure the cause may be which giving her ample fuilds for all immediate wants, asked her to call again at his office on the following morning, promising to consult his wife about the matter in the meantime.

The Actor's Old Love.

Mr. Macready survived his retireent from the stage more than twentyo yeas, which he spent first at Sher-Larne, and afterwards at Cheltenham, where he died on the 27th of April, 1873. It, was his fate to see many of his "dear ones laid in earth." His wife and most of his children prededed him to the grave. He married most happily a second time in 1860. Removed from the stage and its jealousies, all his fine qualities had freor scope; and we think now with pleasure of his venerable and noble head, as we saw it last in 1872, and of the sweet smile of his beautiful mouth, which spoke of the calm wisdom of a gentle and thoughtful old age. We have reason to know that he looked back with yearning fondness to the studies and pursuits which had made him famous. The fretful jealousies, the passionate willfulness of the old times seemed to have faded into the dim past, and no longer marred the memory of kindness done and loyal service rendered to him. He had done much good in the sphere which Providence had assigned him, and we believe had learned to know that it was not for him to repine, if "the divinity that shapes our ends" had so shaped his that his work was to be accomplished upon the stage. It is of the man as we then saw him, the man whom we had known as a highly cultivated and essentially kind heart ed gentleman; that we would rather think than of the actor with all his weakness and cruelty laid bare .-London Quarterly.

A pretended exhibition of spirit power in the large hall of "ammany Hall, New York, on Sunday evening, was broken up with much confusion and excitement. George Willis, who claimed to be'a medium, attempted to show his ability to ring bells and do various other things after he had been tried by a committee chosen from the audience, and his arms had been enclosed in wire cases. But the imposture was detected by members of the committee, and it was found that Willis Grew his hands from the wire cases and slipped from the cords which bound him sufficiently far to enable him to perform the tricks which he declared were done by the aid of spirits. When the fraud was announced by a member of the committee, Willis and his business mannger a.d ticket-taker fled from the buildings. There was a large number of persons present, who were much enraged pat the imposture, some of whom rushed upon the platform, broke the spurious medium's casket, and carried away his apparatus. It is believed that Willis and those who were associated with him made about $1,-500 from the admission and extra seat tickets.

Read Your Country's History.

In the action of Lundy's Lane a Colonel O'Neil (General, he came to call himself,) got a scratch on his leg. The wound was a matter of great joy. and he nursed it through after days growing lamer with every year, that the memory of his bravery might be ever near him. Gradually, from sheer pondering over his stories he grew to think that the success of the battle was largely owing to his services. One day. In his life, as he sat nursing his leg and pendering over the glories past, a young man, visiting the family for the first time, approached and smypathetically remarked, "Lame General?" "Yes, sir," after a pause, with inexpressible solemnity, "I am lame." "Been riding, sir?" "No," with a rebuking sternness, "I have not been riding." "Ah! slipped on the ice, General, and hurt your leg?" "No, sir," with actual ferocity. "Perhaps you have sprained your ankle, sir?" With a painful slowness the old man lifted his pet leg in both hands, set it carefully on the floor, rose slowly from his chair, and looking down upon the unfortunate youth with a stare of mingled wonder, pity and wrath, burst forth in the semlimity of rage. "Go read the history of your country, you -puppy!"

TAKING IT EASY, -Old Roger was a queer Dick, and in bisown way made all things a subject of rejoicing. His son Ben came in one day and said:

"Father, that old black sheep has got two lambs."

"Good," said the old man, "that's the most profitable sheep on the farm." "But one of them is dead," said

"I'm glad on't," said the old man, 'it'll be better for the old sheep." '

"But t'other's dead, too," said Ben. "So much the better, rejoined Roger, "she'll make a grand piece of muton in the fall."

"Yes, but the old sheep's dead, too," exclaimed Ben. "Dead! dead! what, the old sheep dead?" cried old Roger, "that's good; she always was an ugly old scamp."
